Hazardous Weather

A cool front pushed into the area from the east Friday evening and will be to the Arizona border today. The upside of this feature is that it finally ends the stretch of record heat, with highs back down near normal. The downside of this feature is that it brings moist unstable air to the Borderland. This will produce scattered thunderstorms, of which some of these storms could produce large hail and heavy rain, leading to localized flooding

A cold front moving into South Central Texas today will interact with an increasingly moist airmass to generate isolated to scattered showers and thunderstorms. Some storms could produce strong wind gusts and locally heavy downpours. High temperatures will back away from the near record heat of yesterday to near normal today, ranging from the upper 80s in the Hill Country to the upper 90s across southern parts of the Rio Grande. Maximum heat index values will remain above 100 to 105 along and south of Highway 90

Increasing moisture and a weak disturbance will bring a chance of showers and thunderstorms today across Deep South Texas today. Marine conditions have improved today and winds will be around 15 knots with moderate seas across the Gulf waters
